Meet Some of our Makers

Three inspiring stories of innovation from different corners of the Old World

Luisa and Maria Vieira de Sousa - Sisters Luisa and Maria are the 5th winemaking generation of the Vieira de Sousa family and are based in the heart of the Portuguese Douro. The sisters have restored the family company to full independence after nearly a century of selling wines to the Churchill's and Taylor's port brands. In the wake of the devastating phylloxera infestation that swept Europe in the late 19th century, killing great swathes of vineyards, Vieira de Sousa was forced to sell lands and the family brand name. Having completed an oenology degree, Luisa took the reins and recommenced bottling her own wine, initially using newly discovered reserve wines from the family cellar. The sisters reacquired the family name and then produced the first new Vintage Port in 2009. The Port wines that Luisa makes are defined by elegance and with lower residual sugar than many of the large-scale operators in the region. The still wines of Vieira de Sousa are made from the same vineyards and are as impressive as the Ports. The Alice range, is dedicated to Luisa and Maria's great aunt and pays homage to her career as a teacher through the workbook style label

Sophie Cossy -The Cossy family grew their first grapevines in 1764. At that time, the goal was not to produce wine, but to sell grapes to other winemakers to support the family's income. Sophie's grandparents were the first generation to start bottling their own wines in the 1950s. Sophie recalls "My grandfather was a brilliant man who loved taking on new projects. My grandmother was courageous and was ready to support him during this adventure. And it all paid off". Sophie's father, Francis, passed away when she was just 26 years old, thrusting her into leadership of the family vineyard. Soon after, Sophie made the decision to rethink her wines. Numerous trials were conducted: new blends, different dosages, ageing, and corking. Nothing was left to chance and then the house's historic cuvées became reinvented
